

Thursday, May 02, 2013

Dear Officer,

My name is Farah Quinn and I am a Chef and TV Personality, dubbing me the "sexy chef." I have a diploma from Indiana University of Pennsylvania in finance and studied Culinary Arts at Pittsburgh Culinary Institute focusing in pastry. I later studied at the World Pastry Championships, under pastry masters Ewald Notter and Colette Peters. I have acted as a chef at global events, including creating desserts at the G8 Summit at Sea Island, Georgia and for the First Lady Laura Bush and other delegates from around the world. In 2012, the New Zealand government appointed me as the Luxury New Zealand website travel ambassador.

I am a television personality as well, appearing on the Asian Food Channel in the Ala Chef show, which highlights the regional cuisine of Indonesia. I also appear on other television shows as a guest star and I endorse luxury items in television commercial advertisements.

Furthermore, my husband, Carson Quinn and I opened a restaurant in Phoenix, Arizona, called Camus.

My global career has given me the opportunity to travel the globe, staying in gorgeous places and tasting amazing food. I can also personally attest to the importance of a professional and connected PR representative and event planner—both as a television personality and a restaurant owner. Edgar Vaudeville is by far one of the most talented operating in the industry today.

I met Edgar Vaudeville when I attended an event at the W Hotel in Qatar. I stayed at the hotel as it has the reputation of being the only place to stay in Qatar. I was also encouraged to meet "the French man" who worked at the W Doha. Mr. Vaudeville's reputation of being the trend-setter for expatriates in Qatar preceded him.

Mr. Vaudeville invited me to the opening party of the new Spice Market restaurant's brunch at the W Hotel. Mr. Vaudeville created an unbelievable brunch event which could compete with brunch events you would see in New York City or other major cities. I wished that I had my film crew with me to capture it for the show! It is not surprising that the restaurant went on to win Best Asian Restaurant Award as well as the Restaurant of the Year by Time Out